PREFACE TO VOLUME V.

THIS volume contains the words beginning with the letters H, I, J, K. Including the Main words, to which separate articles are allotted, the special Combinations or compounds, explained and illustrated under the Main words, and the Subordinate entries of obsolete and variant forms entered in their alphabetical places, with a reference to the Main words under which they are treated and illustrated, the number of words amounts to 32,700. The Combinations of simple and obvious meaning, of which lists are given under the Main words, without further explanation, but in most cases with illustrative quotations, number 4,318 more, raising the actual total of words treated in the volume to 37,018.

These words are thus distributed among the four letters:

	Main words.	Subordinate words.	Special Combinations.	Obvious Combinations.	Total ¹ .
H (516 pages)	8,900	2,145	2,260	2,708	16,013
I (530 ")	11,350	1,636	683	778	14,447
J (116 ")	1,727	402	441	419	2,989
K (112 ")	1,577	1,084	495	413	3,569
Total	23,554	5,267	3,879	4,318	37,018

Considered as to their status in the language, the Main words are distinguished approximately into those native or fully naturalized, and still current, those now obsolete (marked †), and those considered as alien or imperfectly naturalized (marked ||). The distribution of the Main words is as follows:

	Current.	Obsolete.	Alien.	Total ² .
H	7,061	1,463	376	8,900
I	7,847	3,333	170	11,350
J	1,361	280	86	1,727
K	1,098	267	212	1,577
Total	17,367	5,343	844	23,554

The differing proportions of the various classes of words here tabulated reflect the different parts played by H, I, J, and K, as initial letters in English. H is, on the whole, a normal letter, containing the usual proportion of old words, Old English and French, with additions from all the sources that normally contribute to the English vocabulary, none of these being in excess, unless, perhaps, the modern learned words from Greek; it contains no Latin prefix. I, on the other hand, containing the words formed with the Latin prefixes in- (il-, im-, ir-), inter-, intra-, intro-, is preponderatingly Latinic. Hence, whereas in the Bosworth-Toller Anglo-Saxon Dictionary H occupies five times as many pages as I, in the modern English dictionary I requires rather more pages than H. But few of these Latinic words are

¹ If to these be added the words in Volumes I-IV, we have for the contents of the first eleven letters of the alphabet, the following figures:

Main words.	Subordinate words.	Special Combinations.	Obvious Combinations.	Total.

	Johnson.	Cassell's 'Encyclopædic.'	'Century' Dict.	'Funk's Standard.'	Here.

The quotations in Richardson's Dictionary are, H 4,500, I 6,195, J 901, K 684.

old enough in the language to have sustained any phonetic or even orthographic change, and few of them are of the kind (simple substantives) that readily form compounds; hence, the number of variant forms requiring to be registered as 'subordinate words', and especially of 'combinations', is small in proportion to the whole. On the other hand a great number of the words that have been at various times derived or formed from Latin, have failed to become permanent constituents of the language; they have again gone out of use; hence, the 'obsolete words' in I are disproportionately numerous. J and K are imperfect letters; more than half the words which would belong to them phonetically, are actually spelt with G and C; hence they are lexicographically among the small letters. Also, they were not properly Old English letters; but J contains old words from or through French, while K was substituted in early Middle English for Old English C 'hard' before e, i (y) and u. The proportion of 'combinations' in J and K is somewhat normal, as is also that of 'subordinate words' in J; but in K, owing to so many C words having variants in K, the proportion of 'subordinate words' is enormously large, three times as great as in H and J, and five times as great as in I. Both letters contain a very large number of words adopted from Oriental, African, American, Australian, and Oceanic languages (these being phonetically usually written with J and K, in preference to G and C); hence, the 'alien words' in J are proportionally thrice as many as in I, and one-fourth more than in H; and in K three-and-a-half times as many as in H, and seven times as many as in I. In those pages of K which contain the non-English initial combinations Ka-, Kh-, Kl-, Ko-, Kr-, Ku-, Ky-, these exotic words may be thought to superabound; yet it would have been easy to double their number, if every such word occurring in English books, or current in the English of colonies and dependencies, had been admitted; our constant effort has been to keep down, rather than to exaggerate, this part of 'the white man's burden.'

Many workers have contributed to the production of this volume. In addition to the volunteer Readers, by whom so many of the quotations have been collected, and of whom the chief have been mentioned in Vol. I, the services have to be recorded of Mr. S. Taylor, of the White House, Crossings, Chapel-en-le-Frith, who at an early period arranged the materials for HO- alphabetically and chronologically, and of Mr. A. W. Longden, of Hook Green, Marple, Stockport, who did the same for those of HU- and HV-. The sub-editing of HA- was undertaken by the late Mr. G. A. Schrupf, who, however, at his death, had only partially put the quotations in order as far as Har-. A portion of HE-, including Head and its derivatives, was arranged by Mr. H. M. Fitz-Gibbon, of 49 Merrion Square, Dublin. The materials for HI- were skilfully sub-edited by Dr. R. J. Lloyd, of Liverpool; parts of HO- and HV-, Hoo- to Horus, Hyp- to Hyz-, by the late Mr. John Peto; another part of HO-, Hos- to Hoz-, and the whole of HU- by the late Mr. W. Noel Woods, B.A., and Mrs. Woods; part of HV- to Hym-, by Miss M. Quick, Clifton. The whole of the rest of the materials (with the exception of the pronominal words) were sub-edited between 1883 and 1890, by E. L. Brandreth, Esq., Member of Council of the Philological Society, who subsequently also (1895-8) revised and re-subedited the greater part of the letter. For preliminary assistance with I we are indebted mainly to the indefatigable labours of Miss J. E. A. Brown, of Further Barton, near Cirencester, and to the Rev. Canon Rupert Morris, D.D., the former having sub-edited most of the materials as far as the end of Into, the latter the remainder from Intra onward. A section from Inconcealable to Indiscriminate was prepared by the Rev. E. H. Sugden, now Master of Queen's College in the University of Melbourne, before he left England in 1887; and a small portion by Mr. T. Wilson, of Rivers Lodge, Harpenden. The whole of the letter I was subsequently revised, with incorporation of new quotations, by Miss Brown, whose work at the materials for this letter thus extended from 1887 to 1900. The materials for J were, at an early stage (1882-6), arranged by the late Rev. Walter Gregor, D.D., of Pitsligo; the whole was subsequently (1896-9) sub-edited, with much addition of material and investigation of difficult points, by the Rev. C. B. Mount, M.A., Oxford. The materials for K were originally put in order for the Philological Society by Mr. H. Hucks Gibbs, now Lord Aldenham; they have been sub-edited for us during 1892-3, and again in 1899-1900, with great research into the literary history of the Oriental words, by Mr. Brandreth. No fewer than five of these excellent helpers have passed away without seeing the printed sheets of any portion of the letters at which they worked; of their esteemed services, as of those of the survivors above-named, and especially of those of Mr. Brandreth, Miss J. E. A. Brown, and Mr. Mount, whose assistance has been so continuous and so effective, the heartiest acknowledgement is now made.

In the proof stage we have again to record the help of (alas! that it should be necessary so to describe him) the late Fitzedward Hall, D.C.L., of Marlesford, Wickham Market. This help was continued till within a few weeks of his death, which took place on February 1, 1901, at the age of seventy-six. We have had in every volume to record the supremely valuable services gratuitously rendered to the Dictionary by this eminent English scholar, who, as a pure labour of love, for many years devoted several hours every day to the examination of our proofs, in order to make additions to them from his enormous collections of notes on English words, phrases, and idioms, containing quotations from, or references to, thousands of books of the last four centuries. To the Dictionary his death is an incalculable loss, a loss that would indeed have been irreparable but for the fact that he left directions that all his MS. quotations, references, notes, and memoranda, should be handed over to the Editor, and that we should have the free use of the books in his own extensive library to which these referred. We have accordingly begun, with the assistance of many willing hands, to have the quotations indicated in his reference-lists excerpted, put upon slips, and added to our materials, so that the Dictionary may continue in some measure to profit by his researches, although at the cost of much time and labour which during his lifetime he himself bestowed. Hearty acknowledgement is made of the way in which Mr. Richard D. Hall has done everything to facilitate this completion of his honoured father's services to the Dictionary and to English lexicography.

Second only to the contributions of Dr. Fitzedward Hall, in enhancing our illustration of the literary history of individual words, phrases, and constructions, have been those of Dr. W. C. Minor, received week by week for words at which we were actually working. For other help in the proof stage we have to thank the Right Hon. Lord Aldenham; the Rev. Canon Fowler, of Durham; the late Mr. Russell Martineau, M.A. (down to his lamented death in December, 1898); the Rev. J. B. Johnston, B.D., Falkirk; Monsieur F. J. Amours, Glasgow; Mr. A. Caland, Wageningen, Holland; and especially Miss Edith and Miss E. P. Thompson, now of Lansdowne, Bath, and Mr. R. Jowitt Whitwell, of Oxford, whose researches, both in the Bodleian Library and at the Public Record Office, have added much to our illustration of the history of legal and historical terms. Grateful acknowledgement is also made of the etymological assistance rendered by Professor Eduard Sievers, of Leipzig, and by M. Paul Meyer, Member of the Institute of France; as also, in particular words, of that of Professors Napier, J. Wright, Bywater, Robinson Ellis, Driver, Margoliouth, Morfill, and Rhŷs, of Oxford; Professors Kluge and Schröer (Freiburg-im-Breisgau), Luick (Graz), Morsbach (Göttingen); Dr. J. W. Muller, Leyden; of Mr. J. T. Platts, M.A. with Persian and Indian words, and of Professor Bullock with Chinese words; and especially, in J and K, of Mr. James Platt, junior, of 77 St. Martin's Lane, London, whose researches have enabled us to give the exact history of many words from far-off languages. The friends who have helped in the treatment or investigation of the history of historical, legal, philosophical, scientific, and technical words in this volume are too numerous to mention; most of them have already been named in earlier prefaces; but particular mention must here be made of the help of Mr. R. E. Baynes, M.A.; Rev. Andrew Clark, M.A.; Mr. W. A. Clarke, F.L.S.; Mr. C. H. Firth, M.A., LL.D.; Mr. W. W. Fisher, M.A.; Professor Gotch, F.R.S.; Mr. Horace Hart, M.A.; Mr. R. R. Marett, M.A.; Professor H. A. Miers, M.A.; Professor Odling, F.R.S.; Sir Frederick Pollock, D.C.L.; Mr. G. F. Stout, M.A.; Mr. V. H. Veley, F.R.S.; Mr. C. C. J. Webb, M.A.; Professor J. Cook Wilson; and the late Sir John Stainer, of Oxford; of Professor Alfred Newton, the Rev. Professor Skeat, and Dr. W. Aldis Wright, Cambridge; Mr. W. W. Dobell, Dr. F. J. Furnivall, Mr. James Hammond, Dr. J. A. Kingdon, London; Dr. S. R. Gardiner; the Deputy-Keeper of the Public Records; the Director of the Royal Gardens, Kew; the Director of the Natural History Museum, South Kensington; the Secretary of the Zoological Society; Mr. Barclay V. Head and Mr. E. J. Scott, of the British Museum; Mr. E. W. Hulme, of H. M. Patent Office; also of Sir J. S. Burdon-Sanderson and Dr. W. Sykes, F.S.A., of Woking, with the history of medical terms; of Professor J. K. Laughton and Mr. M. Oppenheim, with the history of naval terms; of Professor Albert H. Chester, of New Brunswick, N.J., with names of minerals; and of Mr. Albert Matthews, of Boston, U.S., with the history of many American uses of words, especially during the Colonial period.

The Assistants in the Scriptorium, who have been engaged on this volume, are Messrs. C. G. Balk; A. T. Maling, M.A.; F. J. Sweatman, M.A.; A. R. Sewell; and H. Price. On parts of the work earlier or later, there have also been engaged Messrs. C. T. Onions, M.A.; A. H. Mann, B.A.; E. J. Thomas, B.A.; and Miss Hilda Murray. Mr. Alfred Erlebach, B.A., a valued member of the Scriptorium staff in earlier times, who continued to render occasional assistance, died on October 7, 1899. In the latter half of this volume I have also had the collaboration of Mr. W. A. Craigie, M.A., who has taken a large share in the preparation of K, especially of the etymological articles, and has now been entrusted with the preparation of volume VIII.

The sense-development, as seen in Latin and the modern languages taken together, is thus: orig. Holding, having, 'haviour'; hence the way in which one holds or has oneself, i. e. the mode or condition in which one is, exists, or exhibits oneself, a) externally; hence demeanour, outward appearance, fashion of body, mode of clothing oneself, dress, habitation; b) in mind, character, or life; hence, mental constitution, character, disposition, way of acting, comporting oneself, or dealing with things, habitual or customary way (of acting, etc.), personal custom, accustomedness. This development was largely completed in ancient Latin, and had received some extension in OF., before the word became English; in our language, senses were taken, from time to time, from Fr. or L., without reference to their original order of development; hence the chronological order in Eng. is in no way parallel to the original; and the arrangement below is only partly chronological. In mod.F. the word is narrowed down to our branch I, other senses being supplied by habitude; thus Eng. 'habit' is co-extensive with the two French words, and its chief sense corresponds not to F. habit but to F. habitude.

Hackle (hæ'kl), sb.² In 5 hakell, 6 hakel; see also HECKLE, HACHEL. [Not recorded in OE.; but the various ME. forms hechele, hetchell (c1300), hekele (c1440), hakell (1485), and the later hatchel, point to OE. hacule*, hæcile*. No corresponding words are recorded in the early stage of any Germanic lang., but MHG. hachele, hechele, (mod.G. hechel), MLG. and MDu. hekele, (Du. hekel), Da. hegle, Sw. håckla, all point to OTeut. type hakulā*, hakulā*, str. fem. with suffix-ablaut; prob. from the root hak- of OHG. hakjan*, hæchen, hæchen, to prick, pierce, stab, and of HOOK, q.v.

It has been suggested that heckle came immediately from Du.; but the ME. hechele, hetchell, testify to an OE. hæcel, which would also give heckle in the north; so also, the vowel of hackle, hatchel can be explained only from OE. (Sense 2 is prob. the same word, or from the same root; sense 3 is more doubtful.)

Hæma, hema-, repr. Gr. αἷμα blood; sometimes improperly used as combining form instead of the etymologically regular HÆMATO- or HÆMO-. For such words in hæma- see HÆMO-.

These erroneous forms in hæma- are nearly all of French origination. Litré has hémachroïne, dynamomètre, dynamique, statique; to French authors are also due hémaphéne, hématherma, etc.

In words derived from Gr. αἷμα, the spelling hæ- is favoured in the United States, but is rarely used in Great Britain, except in hematite, where it is the prevailing form in industrial and commercial use, and in hemorrhage and hemorrhoid, in which hæ- is however more usual.

Half (häf), a. Forms: 1 healf, healf, 1-half; also 5 halve, alfe, halff, 5-7 halfe. [Common Teut.: OE. healf, half = OFris., OS. (MDu., Du., LG.) half, OHG. and Ger. halb, ON. halfr, (Sw. half, Da. halv), Goth. halbs: — OTeut. halboz*; not known outside Teutonic. The appearance of 'side' as the oldest sense of HALF sb. makes the original meaning of the adj. uncertain.]

1. Being one of the two equal parts into which a thing is or may be divided; forming a half or moiety.

a. immediately preceding the sb., and preceded by a defining word (demonstrative or possessive, genitive case, etc.), as a half length, his half share.

When the two words constitute a recognized unit or individual, half is usually hyphenated to the sb., as in half-crown; see HALF II. The limits are necessarily undefined and vague, and the use of the hyphen is a matter of perspicuity in the particular connexion.

b. separated from the sb. by demonstrative or defining words, as half the length, half my family. (Formerly sometimes following the sb.)

The adj. character of half appears in OE. and early ME. by its inflexion; in mod. use it is sometimes viewed as a sb. with of suppressed, as in 'half (half of, one half of) the men were sick, a quarter or a third of them seriously ill': cf. also quot. 1667.

c. esp. with sbs. denoting numbers, quantities, measures of weight, space, time, or money, as half a dozen, half a bushel, half a pound, half a foot, half an hour, half a crown.

When these are viewed as independent numbers, amounts, coins, etc., half is preceded by a, the, etc. and hyphenated to the sb., as a half-dozen, the half-bushel, his half-pound, a long half-hour, a bad half-crown: see HALF II. A half-crown is the silver coin worth 2s. 6d.; half a crown includes the equivalent amount in any coins, e. g. n five sixpences.

† 2. Half, preceded or followed by an ordinal numeral, was formerly used to express a half-unit less than the corresponding cardinal number; thus OE. þridra healf, ME. thridde half or half thrid = two and a half. Obs.

This is an ancient Teutonic mode of reckoning: cf. Ger. anderthalb (= OE. after half), dritte halb, etc. In English it is scarcely found after 1300. The expression is explained in quot. 811 as elliptical: 'two (halve) messages and a third half-message', contracted to þridra half haza. Hence the following sb. was originally singular, þridde half kyð = two and a half hide. As in Old Norse, etc., half was either declined as an adj. (quot. 891), or stood in the uninflected combining form.

a. In stating the time of day, half past (or after) one or one o'clock, etc. = half an hour past the hour named. (In Scotland, 'half' is often prefixed to the following hour, as in Ger. halb elf, etc.)

Chron.* XXIII. 101 The ship..shoaled her water to a half three. 1840 MARRVAT Poor Jack xlvii, We shall have half four directly, and after that the water will deepen. c1860 H. STUART Seaman's Catech. 43 Suppose 4½ fathoms, what soundings would you call? And a half four.

Half, in comb. [OE. half, healf, was regularly combined with an adj. or pple., as in healfwite, healfdead, healfswilt, healfread, healfsoden, healf- slæpiende; also with a sb., as healfheafod forehead, healfmann, healfpenig, healfrendel hemisphere. In OTeut. half appears to have been a later substitute for the original sami-, OE. sam-, as in OHG. samigec, OS. samigec, OE. samigec half alive, so samibærnd half-burnt, sambrice a half-breath; = L. sēmi in sēmidotus, sēmiwitus, sēmicotus, sēmidemus, sēmiomus, etc.; Gr. ἡμι- in ἡμιβάροπος, ἡμιπλήρης, ἡμιάνθρωπος, ἡμίθεος, etc.; Skr. sāmi, in sāmiyāva half alive, etc.]

I. In adverbial relation.

1. With adjectives and pa. pples. Already in OE.: see above. Very common in later use, esp. with pa. pples., to which half may be prefixed whenever the sense suits: e.g. half-afraid, -awake, -blind, -crazy, -deaf, -drunk, -full, -human, -learned, -mad, -open, -raw, -ripe, -savage, -true; half-armed, -ashamed, -bent, -buried, -cured, -disposed, -done, -dressed, -eaten, -educated, -finished, -formed, -hidden, -opened, -roasted, -ruined, etc., etc. With adjs. expressing shape, it implies the form of half the figure, as half-cordate, -sagittate, -terete.

The two elements are often written separately when the adj. is in the predicate (see HALF-adv. 1); the use of the hyphen mostly implies a feeling of closer unity of notion in the compound attribute, as in half-blind, half-dressed, half-raw, viewed as definite states; but it is often merely for greater syntactical perspicuity, on which ground it is regularly used when the adjective is attributive, thus I am half dead (or half-dead) with cold; a half-dead dog.

a. in the predicate.

II. In attributive relation to a sb.

Of these there were already a few instances in OE. (e.g. healfmann 'semivir', healfpenig, healfrendel hemisphere); their number has been enormously increased in later times, especially through the practice of hyphenating an adjective and substantive when these have a special or individualized application. These combinations may be distributed among the following classes:

a. Originally applied at Oxford and Cambridge to all residences of students, including the Colleges when these came to be founded. Now only Hist., arch., or poetic for 'academic buildings'.

At Cambridge this use survived till modern times, when some of the smaller colleges, though corporations, were still called halls; the older designation survives, for distinction's sake, in the name of Trinity Hall.

The 'Halls' were originally very numerous, but in Queen Elizabeth's time only eight remained in Oxford, and they are now almost extinct.

For the last two classes the name 'college' has also been assumed: see COLLEGE 4 e.

Ger. der heilige, die heiligen, L. sanctus, It. santo, F. saint.) The -en plural was retained in the south during the ME. period, while halwes appeared in midl. and north before 1300. In the radical form hālīg, the d became regularly ð, and the -ig became y; but in hālga the consonant group caused shortening of the d to a, and the g before a back-vowel produced w, between which and the l was developed o, as in arrow, widow, etc. Cf. HALLOW v.1.]

Handful (hæ'ndful), sb. [OE. handfull str. fem., plur. handfulla, f. hand + full adj. : cf. ON. handfylr, Ger. handvoll.]

Handicap (hænd'ikap), sb. [A word of obscure history. Two examples of the sb., and one of the verb, are known in 17th c.; its connexion with horse-racing appears in the 18th; its transferred general use, esp. in the verb, since 1850. It appears to have originated in the phrase 'hand i' cap', or 'hand in the cap', with reference to the drawing mentioned in sense 1.]

1. The name of a kind of sport having an element of chance in it, in which one person challenged some article belonging to another, for which he offered something of his own in exchange. (Also fig.)

On the challenge being entertained, an umpire was chosen to decree the difference of value between the two articles, and all three parties deposited forfeit-money in a cap or hat. The umpire then pronounced his award as to the 'boot' or odds to be given with the inferior article, on hearing which the two other parties drew out full or empty hands to denote their acceptance or non-acceptance of the match in terms of the award. If the two were found to agree in holding the match either 'on' or 'off', the whole of the money deposited was taken by the umpire; but if not, by the party who was willing that the match should stand. (See Notes & Queries 23 June, 1855.)

This sport is described under the name of Neuve Faire, in Piers Plouman A. v. 171, B. v. 228, C. vii. 377, where 'Clement þe coblere caste of his cloke', for which 'Hikke þe hakeneyman' wagered his hood, and 'Robyn þe ropere' was named for 'a noupere', to ordain how much 'who-so haueth the hood shuld haue amendes of the cloke'. For reference to a similar sport in Scandinavia and Germany (where called Freimarkt), see Germania XIX. (1874) 1, Engl. Stud. V. 130. A recent example occurs in R. S. SURTEES 'Mr. Sponges Sporting Tour' ch. xiv, in which the challenge is between a gold watch and a horse. In later times the result became the subject of further betting on the part of the bystanders: see The Sportsman 17 April 1897, 5/5.

2. Horse-racing. (orig. attrib.) † a. Handicap match: a match between two horses, the arrangement of which was made in accordance with the sport of handicap in 1, the umpire here decreeing the extra weight to be carried by the superior horse, and the parties drawing as in 1 to declare whether the match should be 'on' or 'off', with the same chances as to the forfeit-money. Obs. (Such matches are recorded as early as 1680, but the term 'handicap' does not appear.)

1754 Pond's Racing Calendar p. xxxii, Rules concerning Racing in general, with a Description of a Post and Handy-Cap Match. A Handy-Cap Match, is for A. B. and C. to put an equal Sum into a Hat, C. which is the Handy-Capper, makes a Match for A. and B. which when perused by them, they put their Hands into their Pockets and draw them out closed, then they open them together, and if both have Money in their Hands, the Match is confirm'd; if neither have Money, it is no Match: In both Cases the Hand-Capper draws all the Money out of the Hat; but if one has Money in his Hand, and the other none, then it is no Match; and he that has the Money in his Hand is intitled to the Deposit in the Hat. If a Match is made without the Weight being mentioned, each Horse must carry ten Stone. [So in 'Rules of Racing' in Racing Calendar 1826, and Blaine Encycl. Rural Sports ed. 1832.]

There is no beast so miserable, but that he may possibly succeed in a handicap. 187. Rules of Racing in J. Rice Hist. Brit. Turf (1879) II. 367 A 'handicap' is a race in which the weights which the horses are to carry are to be adjusted after the time limited for entering or naming, according to the handicapper's judgment of the merits of the horses, for the purpose of equalizing their chances of winning... A free handicap is one in which no liability for stake or forfeit is incurred until acceptance, and no entry need be made.

3. Any race or competition in which the chances of the competitors are sought to be equalized by giving an advantage to the less efficient or imposing a disadvantage upon the more efficient.

Besides the method of weighting, as in 2, this may be done in various ways, according to the nature of the game, as by requiring the superior competitor to accomplish a greater distance (i.e. giving a start to the inferior), to do it in a shorter time, to play with fewer men or pieces, etc.

1875 J. D. HEATH Croquet Player 87 There is a variety called Handicaps, in which, if the game be not concluded at the expiration of a given time, the player who is ahead wins. 1895 Badminton Libr., Billiards 439 No two men should play in the same handicap when one can give the other much more than a third of the game.

4. The extra weight or other condition imposed on a superior in favour of an inferior competitor in any athletic or other match; hence, any encumbrance or disability that weighs upon effort and makes success more difficult.

Hang (hæŋ), v. Pa. t. and pple. hung (hʌŋ), hanged (hæŋd). Forms: see below. [The history of this word involves that of two OE. and one ON. verb; viz. (1) the OE. str. hōn (= hāhan), heng (? hēng), hangan, (hengen), trans.; (2) the OE. weak hangian, hangode, -od, (also hōng), intr. = OFris. hangia, OS. hangōn (for OHG. hangan); (3) the ON. causal vb. hangjan trans. = OHG. hangan, MHG., MDu. hengen. OE. hōn = OS. and OHG. hāhan, MHG. hāhen, hān, MLG. hān, MDu. haen, represented the OTeut. reduplicating vb., with consonant-exchange (grammatischer wechsel), hāhan (from earlier hayhan*), hehāh (pl. hehaygun), hangjan, in Gothic, hāhan, hahhāh, hahhāhun, hāhan - (levelled under the present tense form). In WGer. and Norse, the pa. t. had the type hēng: OS. heng, OHG. hiang, MHG. hienc, Ger. hing, ON. hekk, pl. hengur; OE. heng (? hēng), ME. heng, hieng, heyng, hing. The pa. pple. hengen also varied in OE. and ME. with hōngen (as in lang, long, etc.). Already in ON. the present stem hāh-had been ousted by the weak form hanga, and in the Middle period a similar change, took place in all the WGer. langs.: MHG. hāhen, hagen, MDu. hāen, wangen, ME. hōn, hagen (hōngen). This identified the old trans. vb. with the intr. hangian, hangian, so that both had now for the pres. t. hang (hōng); in consequence of which the strong pa. t. and pa. pple. heng (hēng), hengen (hōngen), and the weak forms, hanged (hōngede), -ed, became also generally confounded in sense, and (with some exceptions) used indiscriminately. Meanwhile the ON. causal verb hengja came into northern Eng.

as heng (e, also (with Eng. change of -eŋ to -iŋ), hing; at first app. with weak inflexion and trans. sense, hengde, henge, hingde, hinged; but soon, by assimilation to the 3rd ablaut-class of str. verbs, with a pa. t. hang, varying in north. midl. with hong, both trans. and intr. At this period (13-15th c.), therefore, while the south had pres. t. hang, hong, and pa. heng, hing, the north had conversely pres. heng, hing, pa. hang, hong. Finally the northern inflexion hing, hang, was completed by the pa. pple. hung, which in the 16th c. penetrated into general Eng.; where arose a new pa. t. hung (like sing, sung, sung), in presence of which the earlier heng, hing, and hong became obs. The weak inflexion hanged however continued in use (being the only one used in Bible versions from Coverdale to 1611, though Tindale had also hōnged); but was gradually superseded by hung in the general sense, trans. and intr., leaving hanged only in the special trans. sense (3) 'put to death by hanging', owing prob. to the retention of this archaic form by judges in pronouncing capital sentences. The distinction is found already in Shakspeare, and is established in the oburgatory expressions 'You be hanged!' 'I'll be hanged if I do', and the like. Nevertheless southern speakers and writers still often say 'the man was hung' instead of 'hanged'. In the northern dialects, on the other hand, the distinction runs all through the verb, the special sense 'put to death by hanging' being expressed by hang, hang'd, hang'd, while the general verb is hing, hang, hung; the present tense hing extends into England as far south as Northamptonshire: see A. I. e, quot. 1821. In those dialects, therefore, hing and hang are distinct verbs, differing both in sense and inflexion; but in Standard English, there being only the single form hang for the present tense, it is necessary to treat all the forms together. (Hang is parallel in inflexion to FANG v.)

The distinction of trans. and intr. has always tended to break down. The strong verb was orig. trans. in WGer. and in OE., hangian being the intr.; but in ON., hanga, hekk, hāngenn was intr., and the causal hangja trans.; hengen is only trans. in Orm., but Cursor M. and Hampole have heng, hing, both trans. and intr., like the contemporary southern hang, hong. Cf. also mod. Ger. in which the true intr. hāngen is archaic, and ordinarily superseded by the trans. hängen, though the pa. tenses hing intr. and hängte trans. remain distinct in use.]

|| Hanif, Haneef (hænf). [Arab. حنيف ḥanīf, app. the same as Heb. חנף ḥanēf impious.]

It has been conjectured by Sprenger and others that in Mohammed's early days there was a sect of reformed Jews, who professed to follow the religion of Abraham, to whom enemies gave the epithet hanēf, 'impious', and that Mohammed, being misled as to the meaning of the word, adopted it in a good sense.]

A name or epithet applied in the Koran to Abraham; hence, also, to one sincere or orthodox in the faith of Islam. By historical writers, applied to a sect of religious reformers, with many of whose tenets Mohammed identified himself, as professing to restore the religion of Abraham.

Hence Hanifism, Hanifite (Hane-, Hany-) sb. and a.

1734 SALE tr. Koran vi. 79, I [Abraham] have turned my face to him who originated the heaven and the earth, as a hanif, and I am not of the idolaters. 1877 J. E. CARPENTER tr. *Tiele's Hist. These were provided by Mohammed. 1877 DODS Mohammed, Buddha & Christ ii. 85 He aimed [at first] at nothing else than to restore the religion of Abraham, the Hanifite creed. 1893 Encycl. Brit. XVI. 546/2 There were individuals who were not content with a negation, and sought a better religion . . They were called Hanifs, probably meaning 'penitents', men who strive to free themselves from sin. They did not constitute a regular sect, and had in fact no fixed and organized views.

Hank (hæŋk), sb. Also 6 hanc, 6-7 hanke, 7-9 hanok(e). [Found in 14th c.; app. from Norse: cf. ON. hank fem. (The connexion of senses 6 and 7 with the others is not certain.)]

2. A skein or coil of thread, yarn, etc.; a definite length of yarn or thread in a coil.

The subsequent history shows two lines of phonetic change, viz. the change of her- to har-, usual with er- before a consonant (as in bark, barrow, hart, marsh, and the pronunciation of clerk, sergeant, Berkshire, Hertford, etc.); and the weakening of the second element to -ber, -bor, -bour; the current harbour exhibits both of these changes. The late ME. form remains in place names, e.g. Market Harborough.]

5. Math. a. Applied to the relation of quantities whose reciprocals are in arithmetical progression (e. g. 1, $\frac{1}{2}$, $\frac{1}{3}$, $\frac{1}{4}$, . . .); or to points, lines, functions, etc., involving such a relation; = HARMONICAL 7.

(This application, which originated with the ancient Pythagoreans, is generally held to have arisen from the fact that a string or other sonorous body, divided into segments whose lengths are $\frac{1}{2}$, $\frac{1}{3}$, $\frac{1}{4}$, etc. of the total length, gives a definite series of musical notes whose relations are of fundamental importance in harmony; see A. 4, B. 2.)

b. Harmonic motion, a periodic motion, which in its simplest form (simple harmonic motion) is like that of a point in a vibrating string, and is identical with the resolved part, parallel to a diameter, of uniform motion in a circle. Hence in many connexions, as

Harmonic function, a function consisting of a series of terms, each of which expresses a harmonic motion; in a wider sense, any function that satisfies a differential equation of a class of which that expressing a simple harmonic motion is the first example. Harmonic analysis, the calculus of harmonic functions, an important part of modern mathematical analysis. Harmonic curve, a curve in which the ordinates are a simple harmonic function of the abscissæ; a curve of sines. Harmonic analyser, an integrating machine invented by Lord Kelvin for producing mechanically the harmonic constituents of meteorological, tidal, and other curves.

1867 THOMSON & TAIT Nat. Phil. I. i. § 53 Simple harmonic motion . . Such motions [are] approximately those of the simplest vibrations of sounding bodies . . whence their name. Ibid. § 56 The velocity of a point executing a simple harmonic motion is a simple harmonic function of the time. Ibid. § 75 A complex harmonic function, with a constant term added, is the proper expression . . for any . . periodic function. Ibid. i. i. App. B. The . . method . . commonly referred to by English writers as that of 'Laplace's Co-efficients', is here called spherical harmonic analysis . . A spherical harmonic function is defined as a homogeneous function, V_n , of x, y, z , which satisfies the equation $\frac{d^2 V}{dx^2} + \frac{d^2 V}{dy^2} + \frac{d^2 V}{dz^2} = 0$.

1. pl. A theory or system of musical sounds or intervals; that part of acoustics which relates to music. (Rarely in sing.) Obs. exc. in reference to ancient systems.

1709-29 V. MANDRY Syst. Math., Arith. 48 That the Lovers of Music may have the Proportions in view . . we thought it convenient in this place to expose the Harmonics of the Ingenious John Kepler. 1760 STILES in Phil. Sc. (1857) I. 50 The truths of Harmonics . . were cultivated with much care.

2. (Short for harmonic tone.) One of the secondary or subordinate tones produced by vibration of the aliquot parts of a sonorous body (as a string, reed, column of air in a pipe, etc.); usually accompanying the primary or fundamental tone produced by the vibration of the body as a whole. Also called overtone or upper partials (as being of higher pitch than the fundamental tone).

Harmonics are sometimes produced independently, as in the violin and other stringed instruments by varying the point of contact of the bow, or by lightly pressing the string with the finger at special points, and in certain wind instruments by varying the force or direction of the breath. Natural harmonics: the series of harmonics naturally produced by the vibration of a string, etc., in halves, thirds, quarters, and so on; also, on instruments of the violin class, harmonics obtained from an open string, those from a stopped string being called artificial harmonics. Grave harmonic: a name sometimes given to a low tone resulting from the combination of two tones—differential tone.

1777 SIR W. JONES Ess. Arts Poems, etc. 196 These accessory sounds, which are caused by the aliquots of a sonorous body vibrating at once, are called harmonics, and the whole system of modern Harmony depends upon them. 1831 H. Such are spherical solid harmonics, spherical surface harmonics, sectorial, tesseral, and zonal harmonics, etc.

1867 THOMSON & TAIT Nat. Philos. i. I. App. B. Th. Electr. & Magn.* I. 67 To express the potential at any point P of any distribution of matter in a series of spherical solid harmonics. Ibid. 68 It is evident that the density of this distribution on the sphere must be symmetrical about OC, and must therefore be expressible in a series of zonal harmonics with OC as axis.

Franklin, consisting of a row of hemispherical glasses fitted on an axis turned by a treadle and dipping into a trough of water, played by the application of the finger; an improvement of the earlier 'musical glasses'. Also applied to other forms in which the tones are produced in various ways from graduated glass bowls or tubes. b. Often assumed to be of Celtic origin, on the strength of mod. Breton hærnes, hærnes, (1) old iron, (2) harness, cuirass (Le Gonidec), compared with mod. Breton hærnes (in this sense) is prob. from French.

In the obscurity that surrounds the origin of the word, the primary sense and the order of sense-development remain uncertain. Harpy-bat. A name given to two or more species of bat found in the East Indies.

1883 CASSELL's Nat. Hist. I. 276 The Harpy Bat (Harpyia cephalotes), the Molucca Bat of Pennant and Shaw, inhabits the islands of Celebes and Amboyna. Ibid. 308 The Harpy Bat (Harpyiocephalus harpia) is about two inches and a half long, with a tail nearly two inches in length . . observed in India, at Darjeling, and the Khasia hills.

Harpy-eagle. A large and powerful bird of prey (Thyrasya harpyia, or Harpyia destructor) larger than the golden eagle, with crested head and fan-shaped tail, a native of South America.

1830 T. ATTWOOD Lett. to Wife 21 June in C. M. Wakefield Life x. (1885) 143. I went on Saturday to see the harpy eagle, and a most grand and beautiful creature he is. 1883 CASSELL's *Nat. These French forms were in turn adopted in English, where also the influence of the earlier hackbush, hagbush, gave rise to the mixed forms harquebush, hargubush, harquebusse, etc.]

1. The early type of portable gun, varying in size from a small cannon to a musket, which on account of its weight was, when used in the field, supported upon a tripod, trestle, or other 'carriage', and afterwards upon a forked 'rest'. The name in German and Flemish meant literally 'hook-gun', from the hook cast along with the piece, by which it was fastened to the 'carriage'; but the name became generic for portable fire-arms generally in the 16th century, so that the type with the hook was subsequently distinguished as arquebuse à croc: see 2.

According to Wendelin Boeheim, Handbuch der Waffenkunde (Leipzig 1890) 447, 455, the hook of the original hakenbüsche was intended to hold on to a wall or other fixed object, partly to support the weight of the barrel and partly to diminish the recoil. Maximilian I (early 16th cent.) introduced the portable tripod which could be put together in the field. The forked rest came in about 1520, with the Spanish musket.

(As this was exactly the original hakenbüsche, the addition à croc, 'with hook', was doubtless made after the etymological meaning of haquebute or arquebuse was forgotten, and the name extended to fire-arms which had no haken or croc. Littré identifies the croc with the fourchette or rest, but one of his quotations has 'chacun une harquebuse à croc sans fourchette' and another explains the use of the croc: 'harquebuses à croc, que l'on ne peut bien tirer si elles ne sont liées et accrochées sur du bois', tied and hooked upon wood.)
